Section 2: EX-99.1 (EXHIBIT 99.1)
Minnesota related to TCF's overdraft opt-in practices from 2010 to April, 2014.

The CFPB has been reviewing TCF's overdraft protection program as part of its ongoing focus on these programs across the banking industry. For the past several months, we have engaged in discussions with the CFPB in a good faith effort to resolve this matter. It is unfortunate that the CFPB has decided to litigate this matter. Although we remain hopeful that we can reach an appropriate resolution, TCF intends to vigorously defend against the CFPB's complaint. We believe that at all times our overdraft protection program complied with the letter and spirit of all applicable laws and regulations, and that we treated our customers fairly.

TCF rejects the claims made by the CFPB and strongly believes our overdraft protection program is a valued product for our customers.

We value our customers and have a deep understanding of their banking needs, how they use our products, and how they use our overdraft protection program. We have evolved our program over the years, both proactively and in response to changing regulations.

We believe we have strong, principled defenses to the CFPB's complaint. We also believe the CFPB's claims are based on data not representative of TCF's customers and mischaracterize our opt-in practices and disclosures, which we believe clearly informed customers about their choice before, during, and after they made their opt-in decision.

The CFPB’s allegations that the verbal presentations of TCF employees misled customers are clearly contradicted by two key facts. First, TCF customers who opened accounts online between 2010 and 2016, with no face-to-face interaction with TCF employees, opted in to TCF’s overdraft protection at a consistent rate of over 60%. Second, there were virtually no complaints from customers stating that they did not understand they had opted in to overdraft protection. From 2010 to 2015, there were a total of only 341 complaints from our 2.6 million customers related to their decision to opt-in.

We believe our customers who have elected to participate in our overdraft program view it as a valuable service they otherwise would not have had access to, which allows them to pay for life's necessities such as gasoline, groceries, or medicine. For other customers, the program serves as a safety net that doesn't cost them anything if they don't use it. We receive very few complaints from our customers about the overdraft program, which we believe provides a valuable service.

Contrary to the CFPB’s claims, we believe our customers participate in TCF’s program knowingly and voluntarily. We followed all federal regulations before enrolling customers in the program by obtaining their affirmative consent after disclosing all necessary details of the program and providing them with written confirmation of their decision.

We are proud of our long track record of serving a diverse customer base with a variety of banking needs. Customers who do not maintain large balances rely on our overdraft program to make essential purchases that would otherwise be declined. In cases where customers used the program and experienced financial hardship, we waived or wrote off more than $100 million in fees since 2010.

We are committed to serving our customers with integrity and fairness, delivering a quality banking experience that addresses their evolving needs.
